IN THE SEA'S MAW.

Whole Islands Swallowed Ry Alaskan Earthquake.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 21 -Advices from Juneau, brought by steamer, tell of terrible earthquakes on the Mile, Manrel's Desperate Fight in an southwest coast of the Alaska Pen insula, near Cook's Inlet Islanda in the Gulf of Alaska disappeared as if swallowed up by an immense sub marine crater. In their stead ap peared new islands and bodies of land extending from the shores far into the sea. Mountains along the coast line were shaken like ten-ping, and huge glaciers running into the sea were shattered and greatice bergs sent tumbling into the sea with terrific noises.

The shock began Sunday Septem ber 3, and occured at intervals for a week thereafter, each day registering a number of eruptions and disturb ances The shocks were felt as far south as Juneau, the largest city in Alaska. Several Juneau houses were damaged.

Twenty Persons Irjured.

Carthage, Mo., Sept. 21 .- A wreck occurred this evening on the electric railway one mile south of Carthage, at the hour when many were returning from visiting the mining camps of Jasper county.

Just as the car reached Prince's curve, one of the sharpest on the road, it left the track and turned over. Many of the passengers were injured, none of them fatally. The motorman, W. F. Walker, escaped W. C. Crawford, the conductor, sustained a broken arm and was badly bruised. More than twenty have so far been reported for medical aid.

ESSIE. BY U. V.

She was out on the sands alone in the midnight The cool, fresh winds blew in from the sea and lifted her hair, already damp from the heavy spray, but it only touched her fevered brow seemingly to a fiercer fever Poor Essie Grant!

Far off, round the dim, distant point, a white sail glimmered and too plainly told her what way the swift yacht Tycho was following with its happy burden. The sound of music and laughter had come back to her above the roar of the surf, and she could not sleep in her little room down in her father's cottage while the lights were flashing so merrily from the myriad windows of the Grand Hotel.

She ground her feet hard into the sand and said, in a low voice, talking to the winds and waves:

"I was happy enough before they came-happy in my quiet, ignorant life; and now I am unhappy because I am like a child crying for the moon. Their life is not my life; they are away above me and out of reach. And yet-and yet he follows me; he talks with me; he steals away from the ballroom and the billiard saloon and lies under the shadowy cliff for hours and hours telling me stories. singing sometimes, in such a grand. sweet voice! It only makes our fisher folk seem rude and coarser when I must go back to them "
